TRADITIONAL COIN OPERATED GAMES

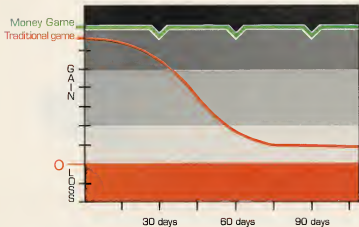

Traditionally, coin-operated games have always been considered a good investment with gigantic returns for about the first ninety days. Then, traditionally, the income starts to taper off until an operator is economically encouraged to put that game in a new location or switch his games around from location to location so that each location always has a new game. Eventually, all the games are replaced with new games, but it's still profitable and it's the only way one can operate a game business. Right? Wrong? There is a better way.

THE MONEY GAME

Is the new PROGRAMMABLE COMPUTER game from Amalgamated Enterprises, Incorporated. Although the initial investment is a little more, The Money Game never has to be relocated and will never be out-dated. Almost any game you can think of can be programmed and changing games is as simple as plugging in a toaster. Your Money Game is always a brand-new game. The cost to change? About $35 or less. Each Money Game comes complete with its own mini-computer and two memory units. One is to be used in the game while the other one is being reprogrammed at our main facility in San Diego. There will be a minimum of twelve new games available during the first year so that you can change your game once a month if you like. There are thousands of different types of video games we have to choose from, but some games make a lot more money than others. So before we release any new game program for distribution, we run a test market to determine the reaction of the public. This takes all the guess work out of which game to reprogram next.

Just imagine always having the hottest new game on the market and being able to keep your game business at peak profits ALL THE TIME. The Money Game is every game that ever was or ever will be in one game.
